"I want the truth to be known. The lies have got to end." A Long Tan security guard has also been sacked and a Senate inquiry has been established to investigate the death. A private hire company representing the dead conscripts has insisted the army "acted entirely in good faith" in accepting the $2 million bill it had been given and in not passing on the costs to the men's families. "I hope this can be a catalyst for all those who have been holding the truth back and holding back the others who may have the courage to speak the truth," he said.Edward Snowden is taking his crusade against the government and invasive surveillance technologies to the International Criminal Court. The former CIA agent is now asking the ICC to investigate the United States for its "crimes against humanity." The criminal documents made public by Snowden have provided shocking insight into the scope and methods of the U.S. surveillance state. The 28,000 top secret documents revealed a massive federal spying effort across six U.S. federal agencies as well as international spying projects. ADVERTISEMENT Documents from those agencies revealed that the U.S. Army Cyber Command is seeking to "set the example" through a new Department of Defense project. That project would "manage any encounter with an enemy that results in an exchange of information." "An enemy who refuses to accept our informational advantage will be no match for us," the document boasts. "We will organize, train, equip, and empower our civilian, military, and intelligence communities to dominate the information domain and create as much

In most cases, the air is routed over the heating elements or heated from a heat source to a room or into a building cavity to be heated or cooled. Depending on the size and volume of the air flow, the air may require greater heating or cooling, thereby resulting in a higher consumption of electricity for the electrical heating elements or heat source. Another system of hot water heating is the so-called "System 62" of Sullivan Industries, which uses tankless water heaters to provide heated water for household needs. Exemplary of this prior art is WO 2004/101925, which discloses a tankless water heating system. The system includes a primary system that can be easily configured to accommodate the domestic water requirements of a single family dwelling. The primary system includes a water source that is connected to a modulating valve. The modulating valve controls the flow of water through the primary system. To heat the water, the primary system includes a continuously heated water pipe that is heated by an electrical resistance heating element. The modulating valve can be used to automatically adjust the flow of water through the heated water pipe to match the household water requirements, thereby reducing energy consumption. While the tankless water heating system of WO 2004/101925 has many advantages, there are some disadvantages to the system. First, by requiring a continuous flow of water through a heated water pipe, much of the heat stored in the water is wasted. Second, the conventional Occ13bf012
