When neurones in culture are depolarised by maintained extracellular K+, two distinct outwardly rectifying K+ currents are observed - the IK channel and the IK(Ca). Fast-inactivating, non-selective cation-permeable conductance G(K) is activated by membrane depolarisation. Here, the voltage range over which G(K) contributes to the total current was determined under the assumptions that G(K) operates as a K+-selective, non-inactivating conductance and that the conductances responsible for the IK channel and the IK(Ca) are not affected by G(K). This revealed that G(K) contributed far into the depolarised range over which the two K+ currents are functional. G(K) was abolished by charybdotoxin (AChTX) or iberiotoxin (IbTX). The contribution of G(K) to the IK current was calculated, based on the simple assumption that G(K) is indistinguishable from the

Q: Highschool Algebra/Trig Proof Verification The question asks to demonstrate that the definition of a Vector is true. I'm having a bit of difficulty with the last part of part (c) that asks to use the definition of the dot product (as an example of how to evaluate a dot product). Let's say that $\vec{u}$ and $\vec{v}$ are vectors. Then, $$(u \cdot v) = \langle \vec{u},\vec{v} \rangle = \|\vec{u}\| \cdot \|\vec{v}\| \cdot \cos(\theta)$$ Where θ is the angle between $\vec{u}$ and $\vec{v}$, and $\|\vec{u}\|$ and $\|\vec{v}\|$ are the respective lengths of $\vec{u}$ and $\vec{v}$. I am having difficulty coming up with a proof that would allow me to evaluate this following part of the definition. I understand how this can be achieved in general by setting $u = kv$, $v = ku$ and $u \cdot v = k^2$, but I would prefer to first show that this is true for vectors that are not parallel to each other. Does anyone have any ideas or suggestions on how I can prove the last part of part (c)? Thanks! A: Proof: Let's assume $\vec{u}$ and $\vec{v}$ are perpendicular and therefore $\cos(\theta) = -1$. \begin{align*} (\vec{u} \cdot \vec{v}) &= (-1) \cdot (\|\vec{u}\| \cdot \|\vec{v}\|) \\ &= (-1) \cdot (-\|\vec{v}\|) \\ &= +1 \end{align*} 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a MUT probe with a cavity and a method of using the same, and particularly, to a MUT probe with a cavity that can prevent cable noise caused by a parasitic capacitance between a cable and a probe pad and that can ensure signal characteristics by minimizing a distance between a sample surface and a probe as well as between the probe and
