Spoiler: Dunia: Masters uses point-and-click mechanics, albeit not the most standard in form. Instead, you switch between 'Action modes' (held on the left mouse button) and 'Interact modes' (held on the right mouse button) to perform actions. Actions can be performed during either action mode. If you switch to Interact mode, actions will be performed in the surrounding environment until you move to a different mode (such as moving to a new room). Action Modes: Interact Mode: Action by touch, such as picking up, throwing, or opening a door. Action Free Mode: Actions by touch, such as picking up, throwing, or opening a door. Action Lock Mode: Actions by motion, such as pushing a button, tilting a lever, or shaking a sensor. Since all action modes except Action Free Mode can be performed at the same time, this also means that everything can be done during any Action mode. Planning and Strategy Each item, action, or conversation that you can perform in the game has a 'reaction', a rating based on how many other actions that action can perform in its current state, and how much time is left in this state. So a fully charged attack button can be performed once you have at least a 75% reaction rate, the same button can be pressed when you have a reaction rate of 50%, and so on. Planning to be performed ahead of time is particularly important with action lock modes, as these require a particular item or combination of items. All items in the game will eventually level up to perform their actions more often, and to allow for better tactical decision making. Reactions: For items with no reactions, the plan action's reaction is always 99%, as no matter how high the action's reaction rate, there are always 100% reaction rates for items with no reactions. Any action can have a reaction of 0%. In this case, the action can still be performed, but the action can no longer perform any actions. Action ratings: Fully Charged: Maximum reaction rate. Actions perform an action with a full reaction rate. Fully Charged With Pickups: Maximum reaction rate, but actions perform actions with a reaction rate of 100% while holding at least one item (e.g. while having the Pickup button of an Action Sword active). Fully Charged With
