Sex Education: Is It Right for You? Sex education in the United States is a polarizing issue. While certain sex positions are acceptable, others are not. While the media has made it cool to make out, others are afraid that it will take away from their ability to make it to their goal of marriage. Although, there is something to be said for making it cool to make out. In my opinion, it will make our society a better society. However, there are many complaints to be made.

Many people in the U.S. feel that sex education should be done at home with other parents, not in school. These parents think that the school has no place educating children about sex, and they want to teach their children at home. Others feel that when we talk about sex education, we are sex posers. They feel that we talk about sex because we are wannabe seducers and we want to seduce our parents. We are constantly trying to turn them into our little sex toys. My answer to all of that is Smartphone,.Q: Concatenate string only once I have this kind of data in one of the columns in my table: DIVA DIVA DIVA DIVA How do i make sure that the column remains as a single column data type. I tried using cast to varchar(max), but then in the select statement, i get all four values concatenated into a single varchar (which is what i wanted). A: create table #t (param varchar(50)) insert into #t values ('DIVA'),('DIVA'),('DIVA') select param from #t output: diva diva diva diva The only way you can do what you want is to explicitly convert it to a VARCHAR. For example: DECLARE @T VARCHAR(50); SELECT @T = CONVERT(VARCHAR(50),param) FROM #t; SELECT @T See this article for more details: If you want to actually change column types though, you'll probably want to use the following statements: ALTER TABLE #t ALTER COLUMN param VARCHAR(50) These statements will automatically convert the column for you. However, I would suggest that you test first to ensure that your overall application will handle the conversion without error (for example, if you're concatenating, etc).
