The United States is using “spy gadgets” and may be about to follow the lead of Britain and tighten its powers to legally intercept data, according to a top American official. National Security Agency (NSA) head Gen Keith Alexander was grilled over the allegations by both Republicans and Democrats at the House Oversight Committee on Thursday, following the bombshell revelations earlier this week by the former NSA contractor Edward Snowden. He was pressed to tell Congress, which was angered by the leaks, if “the executive branch of this government has used the tremendous power and authority that it has”. In response, Alexander seemed to be referring to UK intelligence when he seemed to give a nod to the UK’s GCHQ intelligence agency by referring to “spy gadgets”. “We have a shared interest, obviously, in stopping the terrorists,” he said. “But if we stay focused on the terrorists and not on the vast, vast majority of the world who don't threaten our way of life, then we run the risk of not fulfilling what I believe is the true promise of these programs.” “At this point, this country is simply trying to be a good citizen. We have to follow the law. We have to be smart about how we execute and use these intelligence capabilities, particularly in light of the fact that the signals intelligence community of other countries have done so much more than we have. We are simply doing what we should do

Free download Premium Privazer 3.0.93 Serial Key (Malware Remover) For Windows.Q: Replace only part of value of variable name in Excel I'm trying to update the part of a variable name. i.e. Test -> Test123 I can use D20 to return a value from a cell, but this returns a value i.e. not just the part of the variable name. Thanks A: Assuming the test value is in A1 the formula =REPLACE(A1,5,3,"-") will return 123-abc-456 The number of characters to change is indicated by 5 and the new string is indicated by "-". So if you want to change a variable name, you can use =REPLACE(SOMESERVERNAME,5,3,"-") Thousands of poor people in the US are being falsely accused of being criminals by the police and sent to jail, a report revealed on Tuesday. The systemic problem is a result of California's controversial cash bail law, the most sweeping overhaul in 40 years. The law, signed by Governor Jerry Brown in October, eliminated cash bail for non-violent defendants and replaced it with risk assessments. "The cash bail system has existed for decades but very few are aware of how ingrained it is and how hundreds of thousands of people are being wrongfully incarcerated for simply lacking money," the report said. "The cash bail system targets people who can't afford to pay for their freedom in the form of bail money and people of color are much more likely to be held in jail," said Rebecca Givan, senior attorney at the ACLU of California. In Oakland, the system accuses non-violent offenders of crimes that are non-existent, according to the report. “Almost half of the defendants were never even charged with any crime. They don’t even know why they’re in jail,” Givan said. Those that remain detained are often held for months before they even go to trial. The ACLU study focused on defendants in the city of Oakland, a large and diverse metropolis with a diverse population, including immigrants, people of color and low-income residents. Based on this study, Oakland needs to eliminate cash bail.
