determination of serum prostate-specific antigen levels in patients with benign prostatic hypertrophy. It is unclear whether the high serum prostate-specific antigen (PSA) levels present in patients with benign prostatic hypertrophy (BPH) are genetically determined. We analyzed 477 pairs of monozygotic and dizygotic twins by structural equation modeling to examine the genetic and environmental determinants of serum PSA levels in patients with BPH. A genetic effect, although not significant, was present. The genetic effects were mediated by the genetic effect of age at diagnosis of BPH. The genetic effect of BPH was not significant in females, possibly owing to a negligible effect of BPH on PSA levels. The genetic effect of age at diagnosis of BPH was higher for males than for females; this suggests that the environmental factors that determine serum PSA levels have similar effects on males and females.
