Chapter 1: Deep Digging Into Photoshop You get on a plane, hop from one city to another, and land in a new airport — only to discover that the gates you'd planned on using don't really serve the flight you're about to take. You check the printed information, but to no avail — your flight is still listed as "on time" while it's actually running an hour late. This was the experience that I had when I first opened Photoshop. I was new to the program, but I expected to have all the time in the world to familiarize myself with Photoshop's tools and processes. Oops! I realize that if you already have an understanding of Photoshop, you probably feel the same way I did. This chapter is a deep dive into Photoshop's interface, tools, and processes. If

Exaggerated alpha-MSH-induced prolactin release in normal subjects and subjects with genetically determined galactorrhoea-amenorrhoea syndrome. In order to assess the hypothalamic and pituitary mechanisms responsible for the control of PRL release, the PRL response to the intranasal administration of alpha-MSH (10 micrograms) was examined in 6 non-pregnant normal women (G1) and in 5 women with the genetic galactorrhoea-amenorrhoea syndrome (GAS). Three of the GAS women had the Nes and Mam null mutations and 2 of the GAS women were idiopathic oligomenorrhoeics (IO). The PRL response to alpha-MSH, without ovulation suppression, in the GAS women ranged from 2,420 to 21,050 ng/ml, the highest values occurring in those with the Nes null mutation. The alpha-MSH-induced PRL release in the IO patients was 6,880 and 4,920 ng/ml (8,100 ng/ml with a nadolol infusion). In normal subjects and in IO patients, ovulation occurred at the end of the infusions and the peak of the PRL response to alpha-MSH preceded the luteinizing hormone (LH) peak by 20-30 min. In the GAS patients, the LH release was suppressed during alpha-MSH infusion and the PRL release occurred after the LH peak. These results indicate that the hyperprolactinemia of the GAS patients is secondary to hypersecretion of alpha-MSH. The intact lactotroph secretion of MSH, even in the absence of ovulation suppression, provides in itself a possibility of using the alpha-MSH-induced PRL release as a test of the secretory activity of the lactotroph and as a means of estimating the ability of the lactotroph to cope with the inhibitory effect of the gonadal steroids on prolactin secretion. Tag: parenthood I read something the other day that really struck me. It said something along the lines of "I've heard many times over the past 10 years that 'you have to be a parent to fully appreciate being a parent,' but I don't really know what that means." I kind of agree with it and I think it's a pretty helpful thing to think about. I do
