"We listened to fans' feedback and made the game more physically challenging," said Ludwig. "A pro player can run faster than anyone else on the pitch. The technology in the game unlocks new dimensions and ensures more responsive ball control for every player." 3D Pro-Aim integration In January, German developer Reflections Global introduced "3D Pro-Aim," technology that allows players to aim and fire a shot in the direction they see the ball travelling and also give the ball its desired trajectory by changing its spin. The new technology promises to revolutionise the way the ball travels across a pitch and footballers' handling of the ball. A player is able to change the flight angle, trajectory and spin of the ball by grabbing it with either of their hands during play and then pulling it away from their body. The software predicts the trajectory of the ball while on the move based on the heading of the shot (the direction in which the player aims) and the ball's speed when it leaves the player's hand. By using this data, EA is able to provide the ball with a more natural feel when shots are taken, and more precise performance when passing. Motion improvements EA Sports has also made a number of technical improvements to FIFA 22. A key change is the inclusion of the "Linear Refinement" filter which is used in the game's motion capture system. This ensures that the movement of players is more natural and lifelike. A second key change is the graphical improvement of the players, which incorporate a new level of detail. In the game, players look more realistic and display fewer artefacts compared to previous games. Content integrity In FIFA 22, EA Sports has also integrated content integrity system that helps ensure players are playing by the rules of the game. This system uses players' photo data, which captures the appearance of the player when he is out of possession and is booted from the game. If a player believes he is playing a game that is inaccurate, he can immediately report it to the match referee. The authenticity of a player's appearance is also protected using a 'ghost' animation for offside and goal kicks, and a video replay of the incident is used to verify contact between the player and the ball.
